

I highly enjoyed this meeting held together with the British Society for Immunology. I presented three posters at the conference and attended many interesting sessions. My research focusses on fatty acids and their derivatives in immunology which is why I specifically enjoyed the immunity and metabolism session, which was new this year. The quality of the invited speakers was really good and they inspired me with their beautiful talks about their well performed research. In addition, I find that this meeting is always a good way to broaden my knowledge in the various fields within immunology.

Hilde Brouwers
PhD candidate
Department of Rheumatology
Leiden University Medical Center